Dear Sirs,

the German Seed Act stipulates that seed of agricultural species and vegetables shall not be offered for sale unless the variety concerned is registered in the National List issued by the Bundessortenamt (Federal Plant Variety Office), or unless, by way of registration in the National Variety List of some other EU member state, it is contained in one of the Common Catalogues.

We herewith confirm that currently no genetically modified variety of wheat or barley is registered in the German National List. As far as we know there is also no genetically modified variety registered in another EU member state.

We also confirm that so far no application for registration of a GMO variety of wheat or barley has been placed with us. Since the testing procedure would take at least 2 years, seed of a GMO variety of wheat or barley cannot be expected on the market for another 2 to 3 years.

With best regards

Schnock
